ARIZONA LAW ENFORCEMENT COMMUNITY JOINS FORCES AGAINST PUBLIC CORRUPTION

PHOENIX – Over 50 members of the Arizona law enforcement community gathered at the United States Attorney's Office Friday for a training seminar on public corruption investigations.

The seminar was led by FBI Unit Chief Michael Anderson, who is head of the Public Corruption Unit at FBI headquarters in Washington. His office oversees the FBI's public corruption program, which includes over 620 Special Agents throughout the 56 FBI field offices.

The interactive seminar focused on undercover operations. Six breakout groups considered operational scenarios exploring judicial corruption, law enforcement corruption, prison corruption, contract corruption, and regulatory corruption, as well as obstruction of justice.

The half-day training was attended by over 50 federal, state, local, and tribal law enforcement agency representatives.

The United States Attorney's Office is committed to making public corruption cases a priority and joins with federal, state, and local criminal justice agencies to identify, investigate, and aggressively prosecute public corruption.
